Description
This would be useful when testing session, channel and event configurations. When testing configuration the trace itself has no value and can be deleted at the end of the session. The option could be '-r' or '--remove' e.g. lttng destroy -r

Isn't lttng create's --no-output option enough for such tests?

Just asking.

Phil: not in a situation where you want to write the output to disk, validate it, and then removing the temp files.
